LEAGUE GAME PREVIEW

The Franklin Bulls were unable to keep pace with a reinigorated Saints team who outscored them by 28 over the second and third quarter. The Bulls were unable to find the range from three (8-for-33 for 24%) while being outmuscled on the glass which kept them from having as much input on the pace as they would have liked, when combined with allowing 54% shooting from the field for the opposition. Giddy Potts and Corey Webster carried the offensive load with little input from elsewhere on the roster and to get the win this week a wider spread will be required. The expected return of Jayden Bezzant will offer a third ball handling threat, but there could be some time required to smoothly blend together, and with the Rams coming to town that time might not be available. The Rams are coming off a 1-1 weekend on the road which could have been different had they not lost their coaching staff to illness or the presence of Max Darling to concussion. The Rams will need to replicate their suffocating defense beyond the arc from their victory against the Nuggets who were held to 3-of-28 from deep while still controlling the paint. A win is vital for both teams with the finals calling, and depending on results a win could catapult either team into the top 4, but a loss at this stage in the season may have more drastic effects as the end of the regular season looms. - Casey Frank
